Woodman, who has been the pastor of the New Church at Delft, which for hundreds of years has served as the museum for the members of the house of Orange, there are preserved the remains of a large dog. It was a pet of William the Silent, and had on two separate occasions saved its royal master's life by warning him of the approach of the Spanish assassin, who eventually murdered him in 1584. It succumbed to the wounds sustained in endeavoring to defend the prince, and it was therupon decided to recognize the devotion of the animal by entombing it along with the staffholder.—Chicago Tribune.

Another of these examination of royal tombs, undertaken during the reign of the late King of Holland, revealed the extraordinary fact that in the vault of the so-called New Church, at Delft, which is the mausoleum for the members of the house of Orange, there are preserved the remains of a large dog. It was a pet of William the Silent, and had on two separate occasions saved its royal master's life by warning him of the approach of the Spanish assassin, who eventually murdered him in 1584. It succumbed to the wounds sustained in endeavoring to defend the prince, and it was therupon decided to recognize the devotion of the animal by entombing it along with the staffholder.—Chicago Tribune.

At the trial of Robert Stark and William Beck, who were arrested in New Haven, it was deemed prudent to hold both respondents for appearance before the grand jury at the coming September term of Orleans county court. Bail to the amount of $400 was required of each. The causes leading up to the apprehension of Stark and Beck have been ascribed to jealousy inspired by the reputed attention of Beck to Stark's wife, from whom Stark arranged a separation last year.
